Jason van Genderen with his mother Hendrika, known as Oma

Everybody's Oma – a family's journey with dementia

Jason van Genderen's video experiments with his mum captured hearts around the globe. They shed light on his family's journey caring for family matriarch, Oma as she lived with dementia. We spoke to Jason and Megan, about involving their kids in Oma's life.

Jason: Kids bring this beautifully unfiltered response. As adults we sometimes get caught up in the complexities of care and we forget how simple care can be. And one of the beautiful things with Arty that we saw was just the ability to have a plate of mashed potato and apple sauce with Oma. And he would love it just as much as she did!

Megan: The kids were Oma's life force. When Evie was born, we were starting to notice that Oma couldn't make conversation anymore. But with Evie, there was this unbelievable bond. Oma didn't need to speak to her. She could communicate just by smiling and touching and holding.

Megan & Jason: Oma taught Arty and Evie that she's not going to be around forever, and we had to make the most of opportunities and find memories together. She taught them so much respect, compassion and resilience. That is a beautiful gift that she's given to our kids.

RICHARD'S STORY*

How an advocate supports your choices about your care, and personal and social life.

After being hospitalised because I was suffering confusion I was put into aged care. My medical team had diagnosed me with advanced dementia, but my symptoms were the result of an infection.

After being treated, my health improved but my son David had arranged for me to be in aged care permanently. I called OPAN for information about my options with my living situation. My advocate listened when I told them how I'd arrived in aged care without my clothes, personal items, or keys.

I had asked David if I could go home to collect my things, but he said that aged care is the best option for me and that he was planning to sell the house. My advocate helped me to access a geriatrician who confirmed that I was able to make my own decisions. My advocate then phoned David to arrange a family meeting.

After the meeting David returned the keys to my home and withdrew as my Enduring Power of Attorney. My advocate organised for me to visit my home and also supported my decision to have my grandson Peter appointed Enduring Power of Attorney.

I chose to stay in aged care and with the help of my advocate was able to arrange the sale of my home on my own terms.

LOCAL HERO WINNER – JACK COONEY

Meet News for You's first Local Hero

Jack Cooney was nominated as Local Hero for generously giving his time to other residents at his aged care home. Jack is a volunteer room visitor who keeps other residents company and brings their concerns to the management when needed.

Jack also participates in the Men's Shed where the men come to have a chat. "I go round to their rooms on a pretty regular basis and say hello and see if they've got any problems or they want me to do anything for them."

"I'm just your average guy, I don't see myself as being a great troubadour for change. I'm happy to listen to other people, help them and transfer their problems to the people that can do something about it." Read our full interview with Jack here: opan.pub/local-hero1

Send us a nomination for your local hero for Issue 5 and go into a draw to win hampers for your local hero and your aged care home.

DENISE'S STORY*

How an advocate supports your right to live without abuse or neglect.

A staff member in my aged care home was generally rough in how they assisted me resulting in a knock and a wound on my ankle.

The staff member denied any wrongdoing and also refused to call a doctor to examine my injuries until my family insisted. My family asked to speak with the care manager who continued to insist that there was no evidence of wrongdoing.

My family called OPAN and were referred to an aged care advocate. The advocate provided them with information about incident reporting, duty of care and complaint mechanisms. The advocate supported my family in reporting the incident to the Aged Care Quality and Safety Commission (ACQSC) through the new Serious Incident Response Scheme.

The advocate also suggested that they write to the provider requesting a meeting to discuss the incident and request a copy of the incident report. My family felt empowered by my aged care advocate to request the meeting. They were reassured that extra training for staff would be provided to make sure all staff have the right skills and are careful when physically assisting myself and fellow residents.

You deserve to be safe

Australia's Charter of Aged Care Rights demonstrates what you can expect from aged care providers. The 14 rights recognise your fundamental right to be treated with dignity and respect. Know your rights and exercise them.

Here are some of those rights.

You have the right to:

- ★ Safe and high-quality care and services
- ★ Be treated with dignity and respect
- ★ Live without abuse and neglect
- ★ Have a person of your choice, including an aged care advocate, support you or speak on your behalf.
- ★ Have control over and make choices about my care, and personal and social life, including where the choices involve personal risk.
