I To:

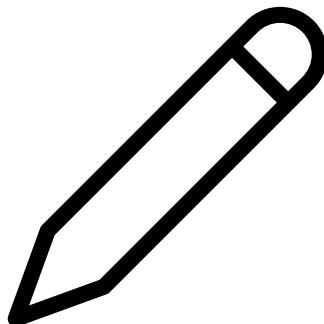

It's really simple. Build this city and all others not for cars but people. Like Vancouver that no longer invests in roads period. Like Helsinki that wants to end the domination of car. Like Varanasi and Kathmandu that are people friendly cities. No car required. Like Berlin that builds whole groups of units without-except a ring road serviced by the underground and bus routes.

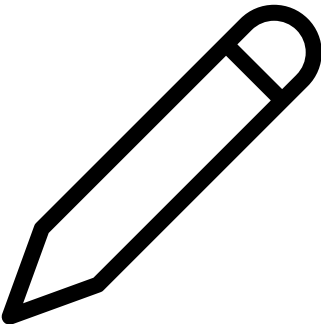

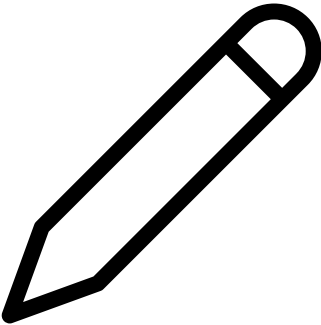

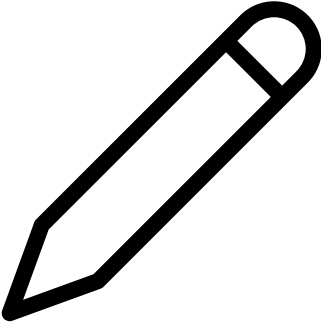

Australians have been conned into this house-ownership thing. They never use the space wasted. Travel by train and see the empty yards including weekends. And yet no council in this backward nation grapples with this except perhaps Green Square in Sydney's south. So far Newcastle's vision is about as compelling as a damp squid. Pathetic would be an effort it does not even aspire to. [pity]
