

To whom it may concern

I would like to see development to have restricted heights of buildings close to shorelines which in the end will restrict the ambience of the development away from the shore.

To have buildings using older types of materials for facades, bricks and masonry rather than slabs of sheet

Colours to be of a more neutral tone, rather than the greys and black of city dwellings.

Buildings to have a bit of character, rather than the straight lines used to maximise space and ease of structure. Eg the flammable cladding debacle.
