I think it is crucial to recognise how our native animals manage and help maintain the ecosystems they live in. Our species seems to encroach on our wildlife's territory without any real regard and destroy what is their native habitat, but destroy our surroundings which can impact our water sources (or lack thereof) and also impacts hugely on how bushfire burn. We saw this last year with the wildfires that destroyed so much. This needs to become an important issue for us all to survive in the future. Our world seems to revolve around the mighty dollar and while I'm all for making a profit, the cost of that profit needs to be looked at a lot more closely. The part out wildlife plays in the balance or things can no longer be ignored. They sustain while we destroy.
