Other comments	Submission re proposed native vegetation. I wish to submit that farmers like myself who own native forest as part of their farmland and have used income from the sale of mature gum trees for saw logs & sometimes posts and firewood for private farm use, seem to be caught up & prevented from taking advantage of what has contributed to farm income since settlement. These trees have been grown to take advantage of being selectively harvested generally after about 70 years & have been managed for this particular purpose and logged with the ongoing forest growing in mind. Always allowing for the smaller trees to grow to maturity. These privately self generating hardwood lots would not be there if farmers in the past had not valued them for their commercial value. They generally abut stat forest that has been managed for a similar purpose. I submit the difference between these and plantation trees is that the farm trees are not growing in a straight line & are selectively harvested, and that the right of the owners to harvest and receive income should be similar. It should be kept in mind that considerable municipal rates & charges are paid by the farmer for the privilege of owning this land.
