Our current world view of domination and control over nature is totally misguided and is reflected in our present trajectory toward ecological uncertainty and instability. We desperately need to change the human-centered narrative that nature belongs to us and is a resource purely for us to exploit. Rules on control and culling (particularly of NATIVE species) is particularly egregious as this would never be acceptable within a human context and should therefore not be imposed on those species and ecosystems who have no capacity to speak out for themselves.
