I don't feel enough is being done to protect our wildlife in Australia, particularly our native species (kangaroos and Koalas). Too often profit, housing needs and economy are put before global consideration or animal welfare. Animals can't talk out for themselves and we need to realise it's not just humans living on this earth. We share it with nature and wildlife too who far too often suffer as a consequence of human actions. Laws are slow to be passed and animal rights protection not at the forefront of concern. I'd like to see more thought, action and care being addressed towards other species, other than humans.
